

Comparative evaluation of plasticity theories against tension-torsion test at finite strain

Al-Gadhib, Ali H., Havner, Kerry S.
Proceedings of Engineering Mechanics
Vol. , Issue., 1992

Abstract: This paper investigates and evaluates three hardening theories against a variety of nonproportional loading experiments on tubes made of annealed copper. It was concluded that the isotropic hardening theory provides the most satisfactory predictions as compared with other hardening theories.